PENDLE HILL, LANCASHIRE

• From the National Trust car park in Port Quin, a tiny coastal hamlet near Port Isaac, this gentle walk follows the South West Coast Path along the clifftops around Port Quin, with views down to the pretty cottages below. • It ascends a small valley to Doyden Point, a headland with far reaching coastal views, passing Doyden Castle and two disused mine shafts. • After reaching Trevan Point, a small peak along the coast, the route turns inland, and returns via a footpath and the road back into Port Quin.

PORT QUIN, CORNWALL

• This short walk begins at the car park on the B5289, north of Buttermere, and ascends the lovely Rannerdale Valley, famous for its bluebells in late spring. • After crossing a beck by a footbridge, it follows a well-defined ridge to the summit of Rannerdale Knotts (355m), a beautiful small fell. • There are panoramic views of Buttermere lake and village, and along Crummock Water to Loweswater and Lorton Vale. • The return to the start is by a steep descent down the fell on a constructed path.

RANNERDALE KNOTTS, CUMBRIA

• This pleasant walk starts at the church in the pretty Suffolk village of Kersey. • It crosses the ford known as 'The Splash' and mainly follows field paths, some with fine views, and quiet country lanes, passing remains of two ancient settlements. • St Mary's Church, Kersey, dating from the 12th century, standing on the hill, can be seen at several points in the walk. • The villages of Kersey and Lindsey were once important centres for the wool trade, and gave names to types of woollen cloth.

KERSEY, SUFFOLK

• Devil's Dyke is the UK's deepest dry valley and a popular viewpoint. • This scenic walk starts at the car park on the hilltop, near the site of an Iron Age fort with a surrounding ditch. • The first half of the walk descends the valley and crosses farmland along tracks, field paths and lanes, passing the attractive villages of Poynings, Fulking and Edburton. • It then climbs the chalk escarpment with sweeping views over the Sussex Weald, following part of the South Downs Way back to the start.

DEVIL'S DYKE, SUSSEX

• Starting from the village of Trefin, most of this walk is along a stunning part of the Pembrokeshire coast path with dramatic cliffs and wildflowers. • Many seabirds nest here in spring and seals are often seen with their pups in the sheltered bays. • It is possible to visit the Carreg Sampson ancient burial chamber, just off route. • The walk descends to the small, tranquil bay at Abercastle with a café and the ruins of old cottages and limekilns, then returns to Trefin via a quiet lane.

TREFIN, PEMBROKESHIRE

• From Alnmouth railway station, this walk follows the banks of the River Aln, passing under a viaduct to reach Bilton Mill. • It crosses fields and passes through woodland along a riverside track to the hamlet of Spylaw, with good views all round. • It then continues along farm tracks and on footpaths over fields to reach Wooden Farm with vistas over Alnmouth Bay, to return to the start. • Alnmouth, with its pastel-coloured houses, dunes and a sandy beach, is where the River Aln meets the sea.

ALNMOUTH, NORTHUMBERLAND

• This linear walk, along the Regent's Canal from Little Venice, starts by Paddington station, heading towards the Grand Union Canal over a blue footbridge to the towpath around the canal basin lined with barges. • It follows the canal, where the bridges show evidence of deep grooves in the stone, cut by tow ropes when horses pulled the barges. • The route also passes the aviary of London Zoo and grand mansions in Regent's Park, before finishing at bustling Camden Lock with its eclectic market.

LITTLE VENICE, LONDON

• From the Invermark car park at the head of Glen Esk, this walk follows the River North Esk to Loch Lee. • A path leads along the loch and the river to the Falls of Unich, an amazing single-drop waterfall at the end of a gorge. • After an ascent to the Falls of Damff, it climbs up to the summit of Cairn Lick. • There is a great view of Loch Lee and a secluded corrie loch, Carloch of Lee. • The return is via a track down the Shank of Inchgrundle, a projecting hill, back to the loch and car park.

- This varied and interesting walk follows the River Wharfe and explores moorland with old mine tracks, many resurfaced.
- Beginning in Grassington at the visitor centre, it crosses the Wharfe by the splendid Linton Falls, then follows the river and takes field paths to Threshfield.
- Moorland paths and bridleways lead to Linton and back to the start.
- Grassington was the lead mining capital of the Dales up to the late 19th century and the fells to the north are covered with mining remains.

BRADGATE PARK, LEICESTERSHIRE

• From the Longshaw Country Park car park this walk passes Longshaw Lodge, a 19th century hunting lodge, on a woodland path. • It ascends over White Edge Moor with fine views, before descending into the steep, wooded Padley Gorge, where Burbage Brook tumbles over rocks. • Oak woodland in the gorge was coppiced in past times to make charcoal for iron furnaces and abandoned gritstone millstones lie around. • The walk returns past Grindleford station and follows the gorge back to the start.

LONGSHAW COUNTRY PARK, DERBYSHIRE

• Pendle Hill dominates most of central Lancashire for miles around. • The atmospheric hill, with a sloping plateau summit, is famously linked to the notorious witch trials of 1612. • This circuit of Pendle Hill begins at the car park at Nick of Pendle, climbing gradually to a flat col. • The route continues up and takes a paved footpath to the 557m summit, where there are superb views. • It follows the rim of the summit plateau past a shelter and a cairn, before rejoining the outward leg to return.
